Regarding Notary rules - there should be a stiff penalty for falsifying notarized documents and or notarizing documents without witnessing the party's actual signature. These are common place occurrences, especially in Title industry at end of month or with "mail out" documents. Closing agents are encouraged to notarize documents with only a photo-copy of a drivers license for their verification and without seeing and verifying the authenticity of the actual proof of person. This should not be just a fine - it should become a criminal matter with jail time for multiple offenses and loss of notary for life as well as a judgment against the title company

Thank you
