If you require courses and testing each renewal period, I for one will no longer renew my commission. It is not as if being a notary is a money making career - I have never charged a penny for my service. I feel there will be many, many notaries that will feel as I do, and you will severely limit the availability for folks to find a notary. Is there evidence of significant problems of un-knowledgeable notaries, or is this simply another proposal by lobbyist similar to the newer requirement that the stamp needs to include the expiration date (thereby requiring a complete, new and more expensive stamp each renewal)?
