I do really appreciate the ability to make comment on any government action.

Birth Certificate, SS Card, Driver's License, Passport. That is the usual progression for documented persons. Can you get a Driver's License without the prior two forms of ID? I don't know. I've had my driver's license for over thirty years now, but am 100% sure that I needed Birth Certificate and SS Card to get that.

How was immigration handled in the 1800's? I know plenty of people were turned back. Some people were held to sanitoriums and hospitals on Ellis Island. Surely they needed paperwork from their homeland.

I still have all four forms of ID. The Passport would trump all of the others.

That being said, I do understand some of the legitimate reasons that some people may not have all of the required paperwork. But, illegal entry probably need not be awarded with voting rights, if that is what you are getting at.
